

Positive signs from Eurozone and UK PMIs

Investor sentiment continued to improve yesterday. This was evident in gains on equity indices on both sides of the Atlantic. In Europe, the Euro Stoxx 50 rose by 1.4%. Meanwhile, at the close on Wall Street last night, the S&P 500 was 1.2% higher on the day.

Data-wise, a batch of better than expected European flash April PMIs helped to underpin the upbeat mood to risk appetite in the early part of yesterday's trading. This included the Eurozone Composite PMI printing at 51.4 (vs. f'cast for 50.7) amid a strong performance from the services sector. Overall, the Eurozone, German and French surveys indicate a pick-up in private sector activity at the start of Q2.

There was also a notable upside surprise from the preliminary reading of the UK PMI survey for April. The composite index rose to a 25 month high supported by a strong performance from the services sector. In contrast, and unusually, the US macro calendar was a source of disappointment yesterday. Its PMI survey for April missed to the downside of expectations.

From a currency viewpoint, against this macro backdrop, both sterling and the euro managed to post gains versus the dollar. Sterling was also supported by some hawkish BoE comments. EUR/USD edged back up nearer to $1.07, while GBP/USD regained the $1.24 mark. Meantime, EUR/GBP was struggling to hold the 86p level amid the stronger tone to sterling.

Looking ahead to today, this morning's German Ifo for April will be closely watched to see if it provides a similar picture to yesterday's encouraging German PMI report. Meanwhile, the main US data highlight is the durables goods report for March.
